VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN:
AN UNABATED PROBLEM

Dr. Archana Verma

Abstract

The topic in consideration, very sadly, is never out of the context. Irrespective of caste, creed, class, religion and age women are subjected to violence in every sphere of life. Many of the successful women across the world have admitted that they have been victim of physical, emotional, and sexual violence in some stage of life. While some have the courage to go vocal and fight for it, but most of the women do not find the societal structure supporting enough to raise their concerns.

We find that the problem of violence against women is common in all the classes of society, be it lower, middle, upper, working or homemaker, an organized sector or unorganized, educated or uneducated. And more so the problem of violence against women has been since the ages, be it ancient, medieval or modern. The problem is so deeply rooted in the society that it is a great challenge to find out any respectable solution
